

History of Isham Family Farm

This trail lies along a public trail easement within the former Maple Grove Farm, which has been owned and operated for five generations by the Isham Family. Formerly a jersey cow dairy farm, the Isham Family Farm has now diversified to include maple sugaring, berry picking, vegetables, and even Christmas trees.

The farm was originally the Murray Homestead. Among Williston's first settlers, the Murrays came to Williston in 1788 and bought acreage from Governor Thomas Chittenden.

Jairus David Isham purchased the 125-acre Murray Farm in 1871 for $10,000 and combined those acres with his own resulting in 162-acres. In later years, 50-acres were sold, leaving the 108-acre Isham Farm as it stands today.

The farm has been passed down through the Isham family: to son Homer in 1899, grandson George in 1940, great-grandson David in 1965, and today great-great grandson Michael.

The house and farmstead, located to the south, are listed on the National Register of Historic Places. The farmhouse itself is a fine example of gothic revival architecture.

In 2002, the Ishams chose to permanently protect the farm when they sold the development rights to the Vermont Land Trust (VLT), which were purchased in part using Environmental Reserve Funds from the Town of Williston.
